Wells and Compton win ahead of Trek / VW challengers

By Ken Getchell

Todd Wells (GT) and Katie Compton (Spike) won the elite divisions at the Greenbrier Challenge, attended by more than 550 pro and amateur racers, in Maryland's Greenbriar State Park on Sunday.

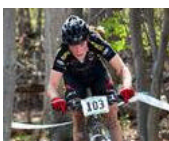

At the start of the four-lap women's race, world cyclo-cross championship silver medalist Katie Compton (Spike Shooter) put her velodrome and cyclo-cross background to good use as she took the lead early - by the time the riders went into the woods and out of sight. The field quickly spread out on the tough and rocky course. By the end of the first lap, Compton had a nearly one-minute advantage over Trek-VW's Sue Haywood, the only rider within striking distance. At end of the second lap, Compton's lead was approximately two minutes. Based on her differing performances at the Sea Otter Classic, where she won the short-track but faded in the cross country, many thought that Compton's lead would fade as the race entered its second half. But it was not to be. Compton maintained her two minute lead to ride home victorious with a 2:04 advantage.

The elite men's race was scheduled for five laps, and from the gun, Todd Wells and Jeremiah Bishop (Trek / VW) pulled away off the front of the race. Like the women's race, the tough course and hot weather spread out the field with many racing one-on-one in individual battles. Chris Eatough (Trek-VW) and Jeff Schalk (Trek-VW East) raced for third place, while Thomas Turner (Bear Naked Granola - Cannondale) and Georges-Edouard Duquette (Equipe du Québec - Kona Factory) battled for fifth place, the final podium position. On the second lap, Wells started to pull away until he had a 1:24 lead by the end of the third lap. Then Bishop began to retaliate.

As they started the bell lap, Bishop had closed the gap to only 46 seconds. Doing the math made it obvious that if Bishop was able to keep closing at that rate, he would catch the GT-sponsored rider just prior to the finish line. As the crowd waited for the riders to come into sight across the lake, news came that Wells had flattened just one kilometer from the finish line. About a minute later, the spectators gasped when the race announcer said that Bishop had also flattened. Unknown to those at the finish line was that Bishop had flattened first and that both riders had flattened their rear tires and were continuing on just the carcass of their tires Wells manhandled his bike across the line, giving spectators and race officials their first look at his shredded tire.

Bishop, though, was much further away from the line when he flattened, and was caught and passed by teammates Eatough and Schalk just before they came into sight. Schalk won the sprint for second place, out-gunning Eatough, who is better known for his performance in ultra-long distance mountain bike racing than his sprint. Half a minute later, a disappointed Bishop struggled to the line and dropped his bike, his legs nearly giving way as he tried to walk away. "That's the way it goes sometimes," he said later.

Riders came from as far away as Canada to improve their international ranking by collecting UCI points, "We're here because there are two World Cups in Quebec this year and you need 20 UCI points to be able to start in them," said Leni Gelinis-Trudel of Canada's Equipe du Quebec squad. "This is our first race of the year because the season is just starting in Quebec."
